Looking Ahead: East County People

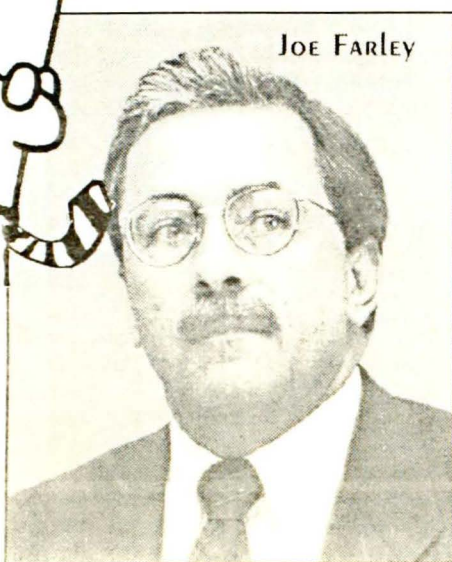

A FORUM Publications Staff Report

People make it fun. People make it miserable. They move and shake and change our human landscape as quietly and profoundly as the days slip by. Somebody once said ten percent of the population makes everything happen and 90 percent watch them. That's probably true.

Some people are obvious: politicians dominate local life as easily as movie stars dominate mass culture. Some people, however, are not so obvious, working behind the scenes or on the fringes of local, home-made culture. We'll try to watch them all in the coming year. Here are a few worth mentioning in our first issue of 1997:

JOE FARLEY

JACK MOORE

Council in November, he should have the support of his reservation in beginning to restore a centuries-old culture threatened by 1990s enticements.

JOSEPH FARLEY

Lemon Grove School District Superintendent Dr. Joseph Farley, 46, has served in his position for five years. He was recently placed on paid leave by the school board for non-disclosed reasons regarding his "leadership style." Whether or not he is able to retain his job, we'll all be interested in knowing what happened and where he will go from here.

SANDRA SYPHER

Sandra Sypher teaches 4th grade in Room 16 at Golden Avenue School. Sypher is savvy enough to let her children lead the way to a more compassionate future.

For Christmas, for example, they all wrote heartfelt, moving letters to the homeless people that would receive them inside of the accompanying care packages the students made.

But Sypher has higher sights set for them. "Children can lead us all the time if we listen to what they have to say."

It'll be interesting to see what projects they can lead her to after the holidays.

PAUL & SHERYL RUSSELL

Christian Community Theatre took a big leap of faith two years ago by offering to save the financial fortunes of the East County Performing Arts Complex (ECPAC).

What they stood to gain was a theater home for their family/musical-oriented company. The risk was getting swallowed by a facility that had been a monetary for its owners — the city of El Cajon and the community college district — for 18 years.

The going has been rough and talk of closing the theater reached a fevered pitch last summer. The same kind of heat was on in Lemon Grove, where similar city spending priorities led to the closure of the Lemon Grove Arts Complex. The theater is still losing money and needs more than $700,000 in repairs.

Paul and Sheryl Russell, the founders and spiritual directors of CCT, have lots of performances slated into 1998, but the clock is running out. If they can land some grants or bring in some other money to save the theater, the whole story would no doubt be a great premise for Andrew Lloyd Webber's next Broadway show.

Jack Moore is more than a bit concerned about the direction at City Hall. Moore is on the board of directors of the Lemon Grove Chamber of Commerce and puts in good amount of time attending council meetings and analyzing legislation.

The way he figures it, Lemon Grove has increasing sales tax revenues from the likes of Home Depot and Bob Baker Toyota, but is squandering the gains on bureaucrats.

Moore is circulating 5,000 copies of a petition calling for a major rollback of Lemon Grove's budget and the reining in of spending on city staff and internal growth. He wants to see more attention placed on infrastructure — the concrete and metal maintenance that keeps a city from going down the tubes.

How effective will he be in stopping and reversing the Goliath-like growth and direction of the city's management? Let's watch.

NADIA DAVIES

MARISA SADLER

Marisa Sadler is on her way to becoming Miss America. Granted, it's a long road, with plenty of brilliant, gorgeous and talented women falling by the wayside as the level of competition increases.

Sadler is currently Miss El Cajon and took the top title in the first Miss America-related pageant held in the newly autonomous region of East County. She will go on to the Miss California/Miss America pageant in June.

Local Miss America representative Billie Sangster is quick to point out that Sadler's course is not to be mistaken with that of the Miss USA, a for-profit pageant circuit into which El Cajon watchables Connie Thomas and Kacey Wilson ventured in 1996. Miss America is non-profit and scholarship-oriented, she says.

Good luck, Marisa!

TIM LAFF

Fire Capt. Tim Laff is president of the Lemon Grove Firefighter's Association #27 & 28. The city has formed a Request For Proposal (RFP) Committee to investigate the possibilities of merging fire departments or contracting out for services.

It just so happens that the new majority on the San Miguel Fire Protection Board comprises firefighters, leading some to expect a great openness to new merger talks.

If the City Council does, indeed, find a way to downsize or out-source fire protection, Laff will have a monumental task of handling the metamorphosis of the departments and all the firefighters involved.

If no changes is implemented, then he'll have to continue to make do with less revenue. That means less job advancement for Lemon Grove's firefighters while trying to hold on to adequate levels of service.

LARRY BANEAGAS

Thanks to the casinos at the Sycuan, Barona and Viejas reservations, the Kumeyaay tribes in San Diego County have sufficient material wealth.

Now, Larry Baneagas wants to restore the Kumeyaay's cultural wealth.

Last year, Baneagas organized a sovereignty conference at the Barona Reservation, at which those in attendance expressed a desire to maintain the indigenous culture which has been lost over the past several decades. Larry has been teaching classes at the Barona reservation to enable tribal members to learn the Kumeyaay language and has also been encouraging tribal members to learn the endangered art of Kumeyaay craft.

Baneagas' goals go beyond re-introducing San Diego County's Kumeyaay population to their heritage. He also hopes to reunite the Kumeyaay in California with the Kumeyaay in Baja California, separated by a third party's barrier nearly 150 years ago. Baneagas hopes that the U.S. Kumeyaay can share their monetary wealth with their poverty-ridden Mexican brethren while the Mexican Kumeyaay can share their cultural skills with their northern assimilated tribal members.

Since the Barona tribe elected Larry Baneagas to a seat on the Barona Tribal

Obituary

Frank Howard Andrews, 74, of Lemon Grove died Dec. 24 in La Mesa.

Mr. Andrews was born in Minneapolis, MN. on Dec. 23, 1922. After school Frank entered the Army Air Corps at the end of World War II and was trained as pilot.

Frank had many careers that paralleled his many talents. He owned and operated several restaurants and was a successful real estate agent in Minnesota, Colorado and California. For several years he owned an interior decorating business along with his wife Willie Marie that catered to known celebrities such as Robert Young, Willie Mays, Helen Copley and the Alessio family.

Writing was a favorite hobby. This favorite hobby led to another career that he considered his most cherished. Frank had a column "From Where I Sit" in 5 local papers, including the Lemon Grove Review.

Frank was a member in good standing in the Masonic Lodge as a 32nd degree Mason. He was very active in the Windsor Hills Baptist Church where he served as a deacon for 12 years. Frank served God in many capacities. For example, he visited hospitals, was active in the Keenagers and delighted in creating wonderful culinary dishes like his chili and fried chicken.

Frank is survived by his wife of 32 years, daughters Susan Butler and Sharon Andrews of Minnesota, Patty Carson of North Carolina, and one son David of North Carolina, stepson Dannie English of Sacramento, and stepdaughters Sandra Antinovich of El Cajon and Mari English of Chico, Calif., and 13 grandchildren.

His wit, cheery disposition, sense of humor and generosity will be sorely missed by the many friends and loved ones he leaves behind. Rest assured that if there is a newspaper in heaven, Frank will be examining that life "from where he sits."

Welcome to my corner of the paper. Please! Not so formal. Kick off those heels. You too, guys! Comfortable, washable clothing is recommended, as you never know what'll spill around here. Just don't get any on my keyboard, and we'll all do fine together.

This is the place where little bits of news and announcements will go, that don't really require a full-on article. It will require some participation from you, as I don't get this type of information from calling my psychic. Well, not normally, anyway. To use a 90's buzzword, we can call it an "interactive" column.

Instructions for use: Telephone, fax or e-mail any press release, local event, happening, scathing, flaming gossip, scoop (chocolate fudge, preferably), or miscellaneous tidbit to The Lemon Grove Review's numbers, or directly to me at : 619/264-3153 (message), 619/264-4180 (fax), Cirious@worldnet.att.net (e-mail). You can always snag me at breaks during the city council meetings, or if you see me out and about in the big city, feel free to flag me down.

In the meantime, I'd like to offer my take on the "People and Inanimate Objects To Watch Out For in 1997":

- Balding Lemonites getting their comb-overs repaired at the Tonsorioral Parlor, claiming their hair loss was from an attack by their kid's Cabbage-Patch Snack-Time Doll.

- The "One Ugly One" that is supposed to be employed at Little Darlings.

- Dick Hennis and his flashlight at any bus stop (if you're city staff, that is).

- Bob Baker's transport vehicles levitating over Federal Blvd. to avoid traffic violations.

- Helen Ofield's hats. If she starts wearing turbans, we'll know she got her "Taj Majal".

- New lines from that guy in Lucky's parking lot who says he just "needs enough for a couple of gallons of gas to get his kids home".

Any restaurant, coffee shop, bookstore, or other well-lit place that isn't a bar, nude dance club, or adult bookstore open after 10pm in Lemon Grove. Don't laugh! It could happen...

If you think we should be covering something we've missed, please let us know. I look forward to meeting you, and am practicing the art of ducking, in case you have some unusual forms of criticism.

Commentary

by Greg Eichelberger

Nineteen-ninety-six came in like a whimper and departed with a low moan. About as exciting as 1896, we saw virtually nothing change, as the status quo put up pink flamingos on their lawn and showed no signs of leaving the neighborhood.

This was never truer than in the political arena, where, in this uneventful election year, 99.9 percent of all incumbents, including state, city, local, and municipal water and sanitation boards, were returned to office, usually by overwhelming margins.

While the demented Ross Perot, the haggard Ralph Nader, and the happy warriors of the fringe parties banged on doors trying to wake everyone up, we were content to roll over and continue dreaming about how wonderfully things were going.

In that big White House on Pennsylvania Avenue, confidence was high, as Clinton, her husband, and their braintrusts lost little sleep over the November coronation. Just as Adolf Hitler had Josef Goebbels as his Minister of Propaganda and Public Enlightenment, so the Democrats have Ted Turner and his Cable News Networks to tell us all how great the country is doing, how crime has plummeted (tell that to the family of a murder victim), how the economy is the best it's ever been, and how we ought to get down on our knees every day and give thanks to Providence for Bill Clinton, who has done everything for us except change water into wine. They do this with straight faces while wiping traces of brown from their collective noses.

The smug, sneaking, smirking crowd that surrounds this man makes those who insulated Richard Nixon look like members of the Vienna Boys Choir, but we didn't care. Never mind scandals, we were like big fat guys settled into that recliner with beer, sandwich, and TV remote control after a hard day's work. Too tired to get up, too bored to get involved, and too lazy to engage our thought processes.

Consequently, soccer moms, and women of all descriptions pulled the lever for one of the most sexist, unfaithful, female-degrading chief executives of all-time, with the possible exception of JFK.

Clinton, who has used his position to cajole,

This was the year that wasn't coerce, threaten and harass women was also swept to re-election by the same dupes, and like French mass murderer, Henri Larue, he charmed them all the way to the crypt.

Meanwhile, the sleazy, ill-informed bigmouth known as Newt Gingrich, used his rapidly-deflating ego and poll standings to smooth the path for Clinton by declaring a jihad against government when a small incursion would have been sufficient.

That, coupled with his own questionable dealings gave conservatives little room to maneuver, let alone cast stones.

And while many in the party bemoaned the choice of Robert Dole as their standard-bearer, I felt that even with all of his political baggage, he was light years ahead of Mr. Bill as far as character, morality, experience, honesty, dedication, wit, and intelligence was concerned.

I think his problem was that no one could relate to him. I mean, more of us have used drugs, cheated on our wives, and lied than have been seriously wounded charging a Nazi machine gunner.

Which begs the question as to why more Jewish voters opted for Clinton. Hello? Holocaust? Buchenwald? Remember? Seems to me both George Bush, and Dole went to fight the good fight, while Clinton couldn't set the American flag on fire quick enough in his many protests.

Perhaps the year was best left unchanged. I believe Americans deserve a little rest after the sixties, when politicians and civil leaders were shooting gallery targets, or the seventies, filled with scandal in high office and a complete moral breakdown.

Ronald Reagan, who is now being treated like the black death by contemporary historical revisionists, tried to give us that respite in the 1980's, but the hangover was still too strong. We need this decade to rest, and prepare, as the "Weekly World news" predicts, for the "end of the world as we know it."

Until then, though, I'll just hit the snooze alarm and keep dreaming of how lucky I am to live in a country where both my wife and I can have two jobs.

So how was your year?

PG Perspectives

by Phillip Giannangeli

1997

Ah, the smell of it! Fresh. Invigorating. Stimulating. A challenge to the spirit. A lift for the soul. It's about to envelop us. It's ... 1997! Less than eleven hundred days from the millennium; the beginning of what should have been year three in jail for O.J. Simpson. 1997 beckons. It's a brand new year, and as usual it's inviting to a fault. Dare we go forward? Why not?

1997. Is it the year Newt Gingrich pays for his sins? How about Bill Clinton and his peccadilloes? Will Bob Dole keep campaigning from long standing habit? Will Jack Kemp get that fifteen percent monkey off his back? Will 1997 be the year they find a way to bring Al Gore back to life? So many uncertainties for 1997. But there are some things that I know are going to happen. Call them predictions if you must, but I'm so certain of these events that I'm going to commit them to print right in front of your eyes so in case I want to, I can say "I told you so." I hope you're ready for these happenings. And I hope you're ready for the year I think is going to house them.

My first prediction for 1997 is that few if any will want to extend it into 1998. You may wonder why I'm making such a bold statement, but I don't think I'm sticking my neck out on this one. During the last couple of weeks of 1996, I never heard a soul say he or she wanted a longer 1996. Same for '95, '94, etc. Even if 1996 was a good year (Padres) no one I know would add even one minute to it (including Ken Caminiti). So bank on 1997 ending when it's supposed to and for some, it won't be a minute too soon.

Another sure bet for 1997 is that Dennis Rodman will make an ass out of himself. Likely more than once. The NBA will again look the other way and basketball will take one more step towards the image of loveable thugs it seems to want to promote these days. As they say on TV, count it and throw in a foul shot.

It wouldn't be a new year if some new fad didn't capture the fancy of the education establishment. I predict that Ebonics and New Math will combine for a new program called He Be, We Be Squared. It'll gain all kinds of support and establish a new hierarchy of experts-experts who are likely moving over from Whole Language and the old New Math squads.

I'm predicting that 1997 will bring another big movie about some recent historical figure. We've had Nixon, Kennedy, Larry Flint, and Eva Peron, so I'm predicting a celluloid tribute, perhaps directed by Oliver Stone, to Martha Mitchell. I'm not sure, but it might even turn into a musical. I also predict that Hollywood will work on a big screen epic about Spiro T. Agnew. He would be a can't-miss attraction.

1997 is going to be a year with much potential. I could go on and give you more insights into what is going to happen in the next twelve months, but that wouldn't be fair. I could tell you about events such as which political figure is going to leave office in disgrace and which film star is going to have a baby out of wedlock. I could even tell you about the major surprise in store for East County in 1997. But if I went ahead and told you all of that, what fun would the new year be?

Take a deep breath. It's a fresh new year, 1997.

Reel Ratings: A Family Movie Guide

by Betty Jo Tucker

The rating system of the Motion Picture Association does not seem to be explicit enough for many parents. In response to these concerns, Forum Publications publishes a monthly listing of new film releases along with a rating of their content in the areas of excessive violence, gratuitous sex, strong language and questionable moral lessons or behavior.

The following are the "Reel Rating" symbols used in Forum's family guidelines. Under this system, a film may have more than one rating.

G - The film rates as general family entertainment.

V - The film contains violent scenes.

L - The film contains strong language.

Q - The film contains questionable lessons about human behavior.

Dump U.S. Ecology, not nukes

The question of whether to proceed with the Ward Valley Low Level (Nuclear) Waste (LLW) Dump may soon be decided. If the decision is made to go forward with Ward Valley, we citizens should demand that the site be administered by an operator with a proven record of safety, regulatory compliance, and competence. The site administrator chosen, U.S. Ecology Inc., was selected by default; the other companies bidding on the project withdrew their bids over liability concerns. Although U.S. Ecology Inc. has been in the business for more than 35 years, their poor safety record speaks for itself.

According to the U.S. Department of Energy Report LLW-103, of the six commercially operated shallow-land disposal facilities originally licensed to operate in the United States, four were operated by U.S. Ecology. Of these six sites, four have been permanently closed; and three of those four were operated by U.S. Ecology. Two of U.S. Ecology's sites (Sheffield, Ill. and Maxey Flats, Ky.) were closed as a result of safety concerns arising from the improper disposal, storage and handling of nuclear waste. The clean-up cost may run into the tens or if not hundreds of millions of dollars just to tidy up after U.S. Ecology in Sheffield and Maxey Flats. In both of those sites, leakage of radioactive material has been an ongoing problem. U.S. Ecology's other two facilities (Beatty, Nev. and Richland, Wash.) have been temporarily closed on numerous occasions for safety violations resulting from the improper handling of waste.

With regard to Ward Valley, the Los Angeles Times recently reported (Nov.22, pg. A3) that U.S. Ecology has threatened to sue two scientists who were commissioned by the U.S. Department of the Interior to study the safety of the proposed dump. The two scientists - hydrogeologists Martin Mifflin and Scott W. Tyler - are employees of the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory and are both members of the National Academy of Science's panel on Ward Valley. The two scientists have stopped their work on the project until the federal government agrees to cover their legal costs, in the event that they are sued.

This is a business that absolutely must be based on the most complete and accurate information available in order to insure public safety. However, U.S. Ecology appears to see the additional information as a potential threat to their bottom line rather than the viewing it as more complete data necessary for making the best decisions.

If the Ward Valley LLW Dump is approved, do we really want an outfit with the abysmal operations record and unethical business practices of U.S. Ecology Inc. overseeing the operations?

Really, Eichelberger, this is 1997

If you look up the word "misogynist" in the dictionary you just might find your name next to it.

Your "parallels" that cats are like women, and dogs are like men [Commentary: "Cats and Dogs" December 19 issue] is a little simplistic, wouldn't you agree?

If you need to stereotype, why not say that cats are like women in that they don't like to be dominated, are aware of subtleties that men usually miss, and are intelligent and very unique creatures.

A strong man who doesn't need to dominate an animal is a man who owns a cat as a pet. It's the weak male who only likes dogs, because he can't comprehend any animal that won't come when it's called.

People in general should appreciate any animal for its uniqueness and not expect it to have a profusion of human qualities. The beauty of animals is that they let us have a "little bit of the wild" in our homes.

Try to have a little less of the "East County" mentality in your next commentary.

JAN Goldsmith

Jan Goldsmith, state Assemblyman representing the 75th Assembly District, loves to tell the story of how he could outplay former Speaker Willie Brown at computer poker. He told Brown he could probably run the Assembly better as well.

Goldsmith ended up sitting at Brown's old desk for a while, but the Republicans never put him up for Speaker. Perhaps he just wasn't mean enough. The party wanted someone as extreme and nasty as Willie had been, and they got him.

Goldsmith is now entering his third term in Sacramento, and because of term limits, joins the rank of senior assemblymen. Unfortunately, the Democrats have regained control of the house and Goldsmith won't ever get his shot at playing Willie Brown's real game. But he's already looking to the next step: a run for state office.

The well-traveled road from Assembly to state Senate isn't going to work for Goldsmith because incumbent David Kelley ran for re-election this past year. Goldsmith's term will run out before Kelley's four-year stint, leaving him nowhere to go in 1998 except state office.

Goldsmith is eyeing the Attorney General's office, which Dan Lungren is expected to vacate in two years. Goldsmith is an attorney, so he qualifies. He's spent the better part of his second term in the Assembly working on border crime and Medi-Cal fraud, the kind of issues that put you in the limelight for state or federal office.

Even though 1997 isn't an election year (thank God!), anyone serious about 1998 is already making moves. Goldsmith's open Assembly seat will at least cross the mind of every prominent Republican from eastern Spring Valley to Escondido (not to mention Santee Mayor Jack Dale and Supervisor Dianne Jacob).

Oh yeah, and Senator Steve Peace will have to decide whether or not to run for state treasurer in 1998. Maybe he already has decided ...

SANDAG

SANDAG wants money! This regional board, consisting of representatives from all local boards and councils, has just released its "preferred $24.8 billion transportation plan," which would require an increase in gas taxes of another 35 cents/gallon and/or other fees.

Voters approved funds once upon a time and East County freeways were never completed, including SR 52 in Santee that won't be done until 2010 and SR 125 waiting until who knows when.

SANDAG tells us the region will experience 50 percent growth by 2020. But the reality of that growth depends on large sums of public money paying for expensive infrastructure and subsidizing development that otherwise wouldn't be feasible. If you didn't like the crowds at Christmas, watch out for SANDAG. They got more where that came from!

Michael Eddy

Michael Eddy has wanted to be superintendent of the Grossmont Union High School District for years, and he just might have the votes on the board to finally get the job.

Eddy has worked for the district since 1969 and is currently the principal of the Helix Adult School. He applied for the superintendent's position in 1990 when Bob Pyle retired. The board eventually hired Jo Ann Smith, a former vice principal at Valhalla High.

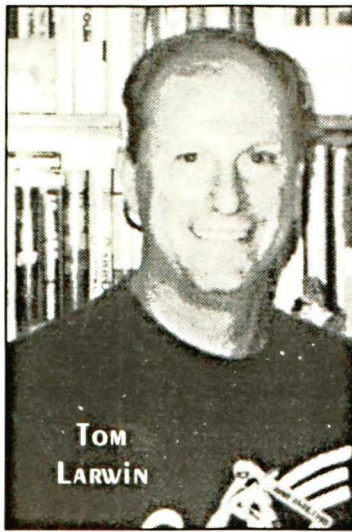

Smith's tenure was stormy. She not only faced reductions in state funding but the defeat of local bond measures and a defamation campaign fueled by Grossmont High School Trustee Kevin LaChapelle.

About the same time, Eddy faced his own problems. A female instructor at Foothills Adult School, where he was the principal, accused him of harassing her. The board did not find Eddy guilty of sexual harassment, but concluded that his practice of meeting up with her in the parking lot and frequenting her classroom was causing a lot of tension. He was transferred to Helix Adult School and ordered to attend a sexual harassment awareness seminar.

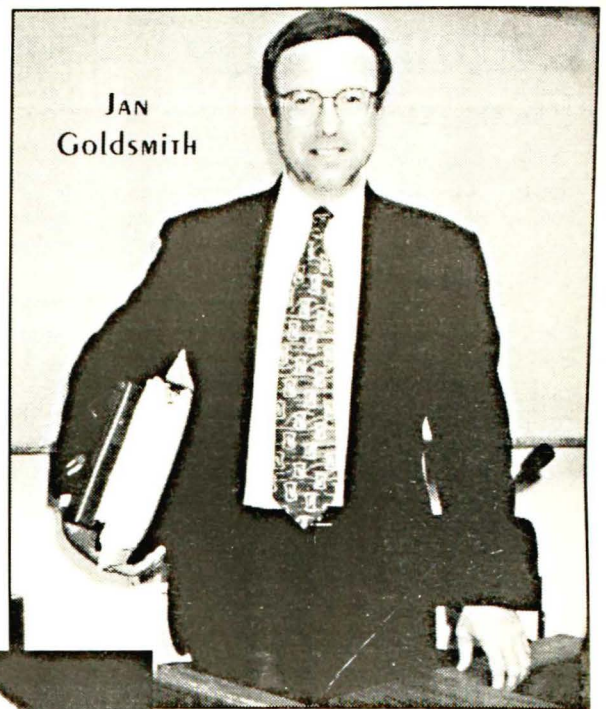

Eddy filed suit against the district for misconduct of its investigation and discriminating against him. Superintendent Smith found another job and quit.

Eddy applied for her position, but did not make the semifinal cut conducted by the California School Board Association. The CSBA's top choice, Joe Boeckx from

The candidate search went back to square one just before the holidays, with interim superintendent Bill Streshly heading back to San Diego State University and county Superintendent Rudy Castruita picking up the pieces of the search.

Eddy, who held at least one fundraiser for newly elected board member Nadia Davies, is back in the running. He may laugh last.

TOM LARWIN

Tom Larwin lives in Del Cerro, just outside of East County. But the general manager of the Metropolitan Transit Development Board is no stranger to those who follow the development of public transportation in East County.

East County already has one trolley line, and by the end of the decade it could have two. The Mission Valley line will be complete to San Diego Jack Murphy Stadium by the 1998 Super Bowl (although Larwin has promised that if the Padres make the 1997 World Series the line will be operational by then). After the completion of the Mission Valley line to the stadium, the next priority will be extending that line to Grossmont Center, allowing not only transfers between trolleys at that station but also increasing East County access by public transportation to areas north of I-8.

The trolley might not be completed to Grossmont Center by 1997, but the planning of the eastern leg of the line will intensify as more of the western leg falls into place.

MAYNARD OLSEN

The makeup of the Grossmont Union High School District changed radically when Nadia Davies won a seat on the school board at the expense of incumbent Ada Reep. As a result of the turnover previous board president Michael Harrelson was replaced with Maynard Olsen.

Olsen is a fiscal and social conservative, although not as flamboyant as ideologically similar members Kevin LaChapelle and Davies. Supporters of LaChapelle and Davies hope that ideology will win out and that Olsen will provide key swing votes.

The Goal Getters Investment Club celebrated its third birthday in December at Lin-Lee's Restaurant on Sweetwater Road in Spring Valley. The anniversary party was attended by 11 of the 15 members of the club. A beautiful cake was enjoyed by all.

The treasurer reported that the club had a return of 19 percent over the three years. Anyone wishing information about the club may call 465-9925.

dren of the district. Olsen may provide the swing vote on many controversial issues over the next two years. As president of the board, one of his duties is to preside over the meetings with the objective of keeping them in order. Olsen's ability to be a public servant will be put to a test on many Thursdays over the next year.

Happy New Year!

Hale-Bopp in the morn

From now until late March, Comet Hale-Bopp is a morning object. About 1 1/2 hours before sunrise, locate bright Vega in ENE. Hale-Bopp is very low in E, 33 degrees lower right of Vega, 20 degrees lower left of the 2nd-mag star Alpha in Ophiuchus, and 9 degrees lower right of the 3rd-mag star Zeta in Aquila. Use binoculars.

From one morning to the next, Comet Hale-Bopp now shifts its position against the stars by half a degree per day. Getting a little higher each morning, and possibly brightening through 3rd mag this month, Comet Hale-Bopp may soon become a naked eye object for billions of viewers in Earth's northern hemisphere.

An hour before sunrise on

On Monday an hour before sunrise, the crescent Moon is in SE. Look for Antares, "rival of Mars," 8 degrees to Moon's lower right, and bright Venus 15 degrees to Moon's lower left. Monday will be the last easy chance to view the old Moon! On Tuesday an hour before sunrise, look very low in ESE to SE for the thin crescent with Venus just 4 degrees to its lower right.

About 30 minutes before sunrise on Wednesday, try for the very old Moon rising in ESE. Using binoculars, look for faint 1.5-mag Mercury 7 degrees to its lower left.

Reel Thoughts

Will film musicals make a comeback?

by Betty Jo Tucker

If you plan to see the film version of Andrew Lloyd Webber's "Evita" (and you should), don't expect a traditional Hollywood musical. Those who do will be disappointed by the film's lack of dance numbers (except for a couple of very short tango scenes) and by the serious nature of its theme.

Instead of Mickey Rooney or Gene Kelly telling Judy Garland, "Let's get together and put on a show," in "Evita," Eva Duarte (Madonna) tells Juan Peron (Jonathan Pryce), "Let's get together and take over a country."

"Evita," more a filmed opera or full-length music video, details the rise to power of a poor Argentina country girl who marries Argentina's fascist dictator and becomes one of the most important women of the twentieth century. Using her influence over Peron, Eva champions the working class and sets up a foundation to help the poor.

Madonna campaigned relentlessly for the starring role in "Evita." Regardless of their feelings about this popular culture icon, moviegoers should thank Madonna for her persistence. She not only looks the part, but also convinces us completely of Evita's driving ambition and her utter disdain for Argentina's entrenched upper classes. Surprisingly, Madonna's superb acting talent (first seen in "Desperately Seeking Susan") actually surpasses her singing ability in this movie, perhaps because of the difficulty of Webber's lengthy operatic score.

Impressive direction by Academy Award Winner Alan Parker ("Midnight Express," "Mission Impossible," and darkly involving cinematography by Darius Khondji ("Seven") help create the dramatic world of "Evita." Andrew Lloyd Webber and Tim Rice even contributed a haunting new song, "You Must Love Me," for the film song.

Madonna is typecast as the dictatorial Eva Peron in "Evita." Antonio Banderas (above) is just Che.

But I've saved the best part of the movie for last. Realizing that my last year's New Year's resolution was to be more objective about Antonio Banderas' films, I will try to choose my words carefully.

The always magnetic Banderas serves as the movie's narrator, commenting on Eva Peron's strengths and weaknesses. Although his singing voice may not be the greatest (Jimmy Nail, the film's tango singer, outshines everyone else vocally), Banderas' physical intensity and electrifying screen presence almost steal the show. When I commented to my husband while leaving the screening, "I'm surprised Banderas can sing," he replied, "I'm surprised he can act." (That's a big compliment from an objective viewer.)

Do we dare hope that "Evita" signals the return of film musicals? If so, then 1997 will be a very Happy New Year indeed!

Colds should run course, build immunities

Contrary to grandmother's sage advice, colds are not caused by sudden changes in the climate, wet feet or sitting in a cold draft. Colds are caused by any one of about 200 different viruses that float through the air and land on people and objects, according to Shawn Bissonnette, M.D., a pediatrician with Fletcher Hills Medical Group, an affiliate of the UCSD Healthcare Network.

"For children, indoor crowding, such as in day-care and school settings, makes infection from cold viruses almost impossible to avoid," Bissonnette said. "The good news is that the frequency of colds in young children can help to build immunity."

Symptoms of a cold usually include chills, sore throat, runny or stuffy nose (nasal congestion), a slight headache and sometimes a cough and fever, said Dr. Bissonnette.

"It is now believed that the woes of the common cold are actually the body's attempt at self-defense rather than the result of the infection itself," he said.

According to Bissonnette, one of the best cold treatments is as handy as the kitchen sink water.

"It's important to have your sick child drink lots of water or other clear liquids to restore lost fluids and keep phlegm thin and flowing," he said. "Also, chicken broth or other warm soups can thin mucus and help relieve congestion."

Bissonnette warned against giving aspirin or any medication containing salicylates to children under 16 years of age unless directed by a physician. Aspirin can put a child at risk for Reyes syndrome, a potentially fatal complication of upper respiratory tract infections.

"Parents are frequently concerned about a child's cough; however, a cough is the body's way to clear the lungs of extra mucus," said Dr. Bissonnette. "Check with your pediatrician before giving any cough medicine to children. The doctor can recommend or prescribe medications especially for children that do not contain alcohol. In addition, do not give cough drops, lozenges or hard candy to children under 5 years old."

It is sometimes beneficial to let a low-grade fever (101 degrees or lower) run its course, because fever is the body's way of fighting infection, but avoid bundling your child, which makes it difficult for the body to lower its temperature naturally, said Bissonnette.

Lukewarm sponge baths can help to increase evaporation and make the child feel more comfortable. In addition, a cool-mist vaporizer or humidifier may help to relieve congestion and coughing, especially when the weather is dry or the house is artificially heated.

Most colds last from three to seven days and during this time the child's resistance to other illnesses is lowered. Suspect a secondary infection if, several days after the cold seems better, the child develops a fever, has a thick greenish-yellow nasal discharge, or a wheezy cough, a sore throat or an earache. Other symptoms could be lethargy and lack of an appetite.

"While there are no medications that cure the common cold, a physician can prescribe antibiotics against secondary bacterial infections," Bissonnette said. "Generally speaking, children do not need to be seen by a physician unless there are complications, or a temperature over 102 degrees."

The following tips could keep colds from rampantly spreading through the family:

- Avoid people who have colds and try to avoid over-crowded places, especially with babies. Young babies have little resistance to viruses so it is important to protect them from outsiders' germs.
- Instruct your children to keep their hands away from their noses, eyes and mouths—a good hygiene practice in any season.

- Teach children to use tissues when sneezing or coughing and to dispose of tissues promptly in a plastic-lined wastebasket or paper bag—any manner of disposal that makes rehandling unnecessary. If a child does not have a tissue, teach them to sneeze into their shoulder rather than their hand.

- Have children wash their hands frequently with soap and warm water, especially after coming in contact with someone who has a cold, before handling food.

The good side to the ramp

A couple of years ago when Caltrans designed Fwy 125 a ramp at Palm Ave. was included. A group of affected citizens organized to oppose the ramp and lobbied city hall. There being no opposing arguments, and democracy and politics being what it is, the city council voted unanimously to oppose the ramp.

Now, although belatedly, the Chamber of Commerce decided to poll its membership. The responding votes were 27 for and 14-opposed to the ramp. The Chamber has polled its membership before on issues, and the board has passed resolutions on several occasions for or against state and local issues, and published them in the Chamber Newsletter of this paper. So, this is not an extraordinary event, in fact, I encourage the Chamber to be more active in legislative matters, providing input. It's part of our By-laws.

Critics of the Chamber's delayed action ask where were the ramp proponents when the City Council was deliberating? As far as I know they didn't exist. I suppose no one had the gumption or courage to argue against such a vocal and organized group in the community. This was unfortunate because this is not an inarguable issue.

There should be an opposing viewpoint. And since I must have a debilitating gene in my brain, I'll give it a shot:

- No ramp means thousands of daily vehicle-miles will be diverted to the next nearest ramp. Thus more residential street traffic, congestion, pollution, and opportunity for accidents.

- Consequently, higher street maintenance costs, traffic control, and responses to accidents. Insurance rates could be higher.

- Reduced access to Lemon Grove should translate into less business in our commercial district, thus reducing the sales tax base. It should be adverse to property values. It is common knowledge that new freeways have literally ruined towns by by-passing them.

- Unless you're a member of the commuting working class you wouldn't notice cars backing up at all the existing on-ramps in the mornings. Those commuters probably don't have the leisure to organize and attend council meetings to explain that freeway ramps means shorter, quicker, and more fluid access to freeways, and less travel time on surface streets.

- Years from now, a new Lemon Grove leadership may acknowledge the error, curse their parents for rejecting the ramp, and Caltrans may counter "We told you so, now you want a ramp, you pay for it!"

So there you have it. Somebody in Lemon Grove finally offering an opposing viewpoint to the anti-ramp group. Since I'm not one of our governmental decision makers, you'll know best where to file my comments.

Personal comments of Mayor Mary Sessom

I have not made any New Year's resolutions for several years. However, I do take stock of my life around this time of the year and see what has worked and what can be improved upon. This column is one of those items that I think can be better. I'm not promising to write something every week. However, I will give you more information about what is going on in your city. This week I'd like to see if I can't tempt you to come out to the next city council meeting. It is scheduled for Tuesday at 7 p.m. in the community center.

This meeting has a long agenda with quite a few items that can improve our quality of life in Lemon Grove. A contract for improvements to the intersection at Lemon Grove Avenue/Canton Drive/El Dora Street is to be discussed. If approved, this intersection will be less confusing and much safer. The City council is also looking at an ordinance establishing design review standards and approval procedures for multi-family dwellings, the newly adopted General Plan calls for the development of design standards for all types of new construction, this was done partly in response to circumstances that allowed the construction of several disgraceful apartment buildings in single family neighborhoods, particularly the Central Avenue area.

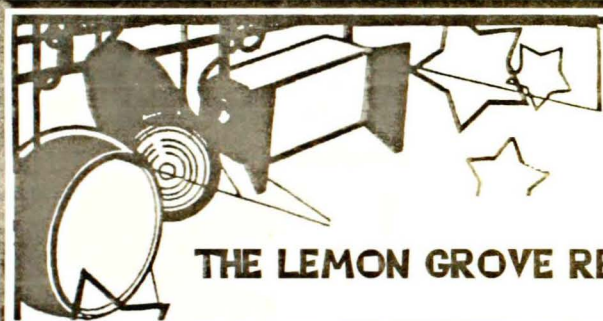

One of our major restaurants, Por Favor, is asking the Council for approval of a plan to add outdoor dining. There is no question that outdoor dining would add a positive dimension to our downtown. However, there are several obstacles that the restaurant has to overcome not the least of which are a lack of parking and the ordinance against outdoor consumption of alcohol. The city council is being asked to grant exemptions to this restaurant.

Finally, the city's public works director will be making a presentation on the city-wide pavement management system. If you are interested in what is being proposed for your street, you might consider being at this meeting.

These items are by no means the only things to be considered by the city council - they just happen to be, what I consider, the most interesting. If you have opinions on any of these items, please come to the meeting and share them. The meeting room is casual and the atmosphere is friendly. I hope to see you there.
